Notes: The mayor of Williamsburg was merchant James Cocke (1 Dec. 1767 to 30 Nov. 1768). The Virginia Company of Comedians conducted at least nine performances between April 4 and June 8 of 1768. Each show was advertised in advance, with a promotional handbill for each show printed in advance, and a detailed playbill the issued the day of the performance. Of the nine known performances, promotional handbills for only four of the advertised shows and one show-time playbill have survived.

Only known copy is held in the special collections of the Rockefeller Library at Colonial Williamsburg; full-title here taken from advertising notice in the Purdie & Dixon Gazette of March 31, 1768. Production of all of the company's imprints is assigned to Purdie & Dixon in this Index based on the company's advertising. They advertised all of their performances in the Purdie & Dixon Gazette, but only about half of them in that of William Rind; moreover, these performances were concurrent with the meetings of the General Assembly and the General Court, when Rind's press was producing items for the public-printing concession, making the Purdie & Dixon press the most likely origin.

IVP Associated Names: Alexander Purdie (345); John Dixon (140)
