Thomas Ritchie became printer to the Commonwealth on January 1, 1815, when the license granted to Deborah W. L. Pleasants expired; she had assumed the formal title on the death of her husband, Samuel Pleasants in October, six days before this session opened; but as of January 1st, that title fell to Ritchie, printer to the Senate; yet, he retained production of the Senate's journals for the duration of the session, as did Pleasants with the House journals.
